Defeating Ione high school in three games Friday night at the high school gymnasium, the Cougar basketball team wound up the first half of the Mother Lode high school league schedule at the top of the heap in all three divisions.

Friday night of this week, the Cougars are hosts to Jackson for the second time this season and although Jackson is playing the regular schedule, the games are not counted in the percentages since Jackson has no home gymnasium and is thus not eligible to league play.

The Cougar babes defeated their Ione opponents 15 to 5. The B team game was an 18 to 14 victory for the Cougars, and the A team capped the climax by out-tossing the Ione lads, 40 to 23. One of the best crowds of the year saw the games. In the curtain-raiser, it was 5 to 4 for the home team in the first period and the outlook was rather ominous, but in the second verse the Cougars got five more while Ione went scoreless to end the half 10 to 4.

The Cougars were just twice as good as Ione in the third period, getting two points while the visitors counted a free throw, and in the windup the Cougars got three more while Ione failed to count. If it hadn't been for Leam, Ione would

MRS. JAMES A. IRVING TAKEN BY DEATH AT SACRAMENTO

Last Rites Held On Monday Morning From St. Francis Church, 26th And K Streets; Capital City Native Lived 26 Years In County

The last rites for Mrs. Mary E. Irving were held Monday morning at Sacramento.

Scores of El Dorado County friends joined the family and many other friends from the capital city to attend services at the chapel of W. F. Gormley & Sons at ten o'clock, which were followed by rites at St. Francis church, where a requiem high mass was said. Interment was at East Lawn.

Mrs. Irving, beloved wife of James A. Irving, of Fruitridge, passed away on Friday at a hospital in Sacramento to which she had been removed only two days before. Although she had not been well for several years past, her condition recently advanced to a serious stage when she contracted a severe cold which complicated her ailment.

Late Friday evening and on Saturday, the many friends of the family in this county learned of her passing and scores called Saturday afternoon and on Sunday at the family home to offer the family condolences and to proffer such assistance as might be required.

Mary E. Dunn Irving was born sixty-two years ago at Sacramento and attended school in her native city. She and Mr. Irving were wed November 19, 1898 and for nearly twenty years Mr. Irving was engaged in railroad and the family resided at Sacramento and then at Auburn.

Mr. and Mrs. Irving and their family came to this county about 1914 when Mr. Irving returned to ranching and took over the management and operation of the ranch which had been established and operated for many years by his father, James G. Irving.

In her home neighborhood and throughout the county, Mrs. Irving won many friends who share with the family in their sorrow at the passing of their devoted wife and mother and a kind, thoughtful, unselfish friend whose many womanly virtues made her generally beloved.

Mrs. Irving is survived by her husband, James A. Irving, and by one daughter and two sons, Mrs. Marjorie Bergman, of Sacramento; Melbourne G. Irving, of San Francisco; and Winton Irving of Placerville; and by one grandson, Robert Bergman, of Sacramento.

She also is survived by two sisters and two brothers, who are, Mrs. Kate Curran, of San Diego; Mrs. Annie King, of San Francisco; William Dunn, of Sacramento, and Mart Dunn, of San Francisco.

LATE NEWS BULLETINS

Coroner A. J. Orelli was called to Camino at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon in response to a report that workmen cleaning up the community dumping ground had found a part of a human skull. Reports from the scene said the skull had the appearance of having been buried for a great number of years and it was suggested it might have been that of an Indian or Oriental buried in pioneer times.

Chamber of Commerce Secretary Ripley said the invitation to enter the Pioneer Quadrille Club in the National Folk Festival at Washington, D. C., in April will be referred to the directors of the Chamber of Commerce for consideration.

WASHINGTON, (UP)—The senate paid final tribute today at a simple state funeral to William Edgar Borah. The President, Justices of the Supreme Court and members of the House of Representatives joined the Senate for rites in the Senate Chamber. FURTHER DIES PROBE VOTED

House Rules Committee Approves Continuance; Debate Due Tuesday

WASHINGTON (UP)—The House Rules Committee today unanimously approved continuance of the Dies Committee investigation of un-American activities for another year.

The rules committee action will put the question before the house for one hour of debate tomorrow. Indications were the house would vote by a large margin to continue the inquiry.

The committee acted after hearing arguments for and against continuance, during which Rep. Frank E. Hook, D. Mich., sought to establish that an "understanding" of some sort existed between Chairman Martin Dies, and William Dudley Pelley, head of the Silver Shirts. He did not offer any evidence, but said he would attempt to insert it in the Congressional Record later.

Rep. J. Parnell Thomas, R., N. J., a member of the Dies Committee, and other sought to defend Dies, Rep. E. E. Cox, D., Ga., advised them that Dies did not need a defense before the rules committee and it was a "waste of time" to go into it.

Reps. Joseph E. Casey, D., Mass., and H. Jerry Voorhis, D., Calif., sought to induce the rules committee to adopt an amendment to the resolution continuing the investigation affecting the committee's procedure.

They requested that the Dies committee be instructed to hold executive sessions at least once a week while it is in session; to issue no statements or press releases until they had been submitted to the entire committee and approved by a majority; to make efforts to call all persons accused in testimony of engaging in un-American activities; and to bind members not to make charges or predictions as to future relations of the committee.

Other witnesses before the rules committee objected that this would "hamstring" the investigation.

Virginia Wilson Bride Of Jake Schneider In Folsom Church Service

The Folsom Community Church was the scene for the marriage on Sunday of Virginia Adell Wilson and Jake Schneider, and for a reception honoring the couple following the service.

More than four hundred friends of Mr. and Mrs. George A. Wilson, of White Rock, and Mr. and Mrs. Leland Schneider, of Sloughhouse attended the service. The parents of the couple have been active in the livestock industry in El Dorado and neighboring counties and the wide acquaintance of the families in El Dorado County was reflected in the presence of many county residents for the services.

The Rev. J. W. Dunlop, of Diamond Springs, pastor of the Folsom church, performed the ceremony and Miss Wilson was given in marriage by her father. Her attendance included her aunt, Mrs. Leland Disch, of Lodi, as matron of Honor; her sister, Miss Theodora Wilson, as maid of honor, and the bridegroom's sister, Miss Betty Schneider, and Miss Eleanor Williams, of San Francisco, as bridesmaids.

The bridegroom had his uncle, Anthony Riella, as best man.

Following the reception the couple left on a wedding trip to Boulder Dam and the southern part of the state, their leave-taking being accompanied by a chorus of good wishes in which we are happy to join.

INSULATION IS SILENCER FOR GURGLING PIPES

The sound of waste water gurgling through the soil pipes between the partitions is objectionable to most home owners and need not be tolerated.

The noise is overcome by insulating the soil pipes with a pipe covering.

Sweating pipes in the basement sometimes prevent use of that space as recreation room, work shop or laundry. Cold water lines covered with non-sweat insulation has to be done before walls are closed and plastered, but dripping pipes are easily reached and may be corrected under the Modernization Credit Plan of the Federal Housing Administration.

BRITAIN IRES NEUTRALS BY BID FOR COMMON FRONT

Reaction So Strongly Unfavorable That London Spokesman Denies Effort To Exert Pressure; 118 Lives Lost At Sea

By JOE ALEX MORRIS
United Press Foreign News Editor

The threat of war on new front increased the worries of European neutrals today.

With 10 more ships including the British destroyer Grenville and 118 lives lost over the weekend in sea warfare, the possibility of a general European conflict was brought into the open by statements of British cabinet ministers and by the angry reaction of neutral capitals.

In almost every neutral country there was condemnation of the suggestion advanced by British First Lord of the Admiralty Winston Churchill that the rest of Europe should join the allies to guard against being absorbed by Nazism or Bolshevism.

So strongly unfavorable was the reaction to Churchill's speech that the British spokesman at London issued a statement today saying that the remarks of the first lord of the Admiralty were merely a presentation of "Self-Evident facts" and denying that they represented any attempt by Britain to press the neutrals into a state of belligerency.

Both Churchill and British Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax emphasized the increasing tendency in London to link Russia with Germany as a common foe.

In Berlin, Churchill's speech was regarded merely as confirming the Nazi viewpoint that the British are seeking to spread the war fronts. In the neutral countries there was open anger that the British cabinet minister should thus intensify the difficulties of the small nations.

Regardless of whether the little neutrals sympathize with the allied cause, none of them wants to increase the suspicion or hostility of Germany at this stage.

In the Finnish war, there appeared to be a spread of military operations to other fronts. Dispatches reported without official confirmation that Finnish airplanes, some flown by foreign volunteers, had bombed Russian bases in Estonia as well as at the island naval base of Kronstadt off Leningrad, where considerable damage was reported to have been inflicted. On the fighting fronts the Finns said that new Russian attacks on the Karelian Isthmus had been repulsed with big losses and that the Red army forces on the North central Salla front were encircled on three sides at Lake Marka.

It comes in the form of a letter from M. J. Pickering, who was in charge of festivals at the Golden Gate Exposition for 1939 at Treasure Island, and who is now business manager for the seventh annual National Folk Festival, to be held April 25, 26 and 27, at Washington, D. C.

Placerville stands out in my mind as one of the one hundred per cent places I have had the pleasure of contacting in these United States, and I have had to do with groups throughout the country from coast to coast, Canada to Mexico.

"During my six years of work in the folk field with the National Folk Festival and sectional festivals, of all the presentations I have ever seen, one of the very best from the standpoint of participants and sponsors was found in your city.

"As I told you, in all my experience I had never known one group anywhere in the country who could compare with your group in color of the folk material in which they are keeping alive an interest. In addition to the color and authenticity of the dancers, there was also the factor of the outstanding music with Mrs. Masten and Hardy and the inimitable Mrs. Hardy. I can tell you as I stated at San Francisco, in all my experience with this type of group, there is none better than yours.

"I recall during the delightful day we all spent together at Plymouth that you and 'Doc' Anderson were telling me how you originally had the sketch covering the hanging of one of the bad men at Hangtown each morning before eight o'clock by the Vigilantes, the same sketch which, in a way, was used in the Cavalcade."

The letter continues to suggest that perhaps, if the Pioneer Quadrille Club would enter the festival, it could also be arranged to present the sketch of the hanging, with a proper explanation of the few occasions on which such steps were necessary in old Hangtown.

"Just as you led out in sending representation to the exposition," says another paragraph in the three-page letter, "I want you now to send on your group to our seventh annual National Folk Festival."

Miss Betty Lyon is home from Marin Junior College at Ross for the ten-day mid-term vacation.

100 Feared Lost In Fire At Sea

Storms Raging Over Scene Cause Virtual Abandonment Of Further Rescue Hopes

GENOA, ITALY (UP)—Shipping circles said today that hope was abandoned for more than 100 passengers and crew members of the burned Italian liner Orazio, because of storms off the French Mediterranean coast.

Messages received here said that 104 to 107 persons were missing in three life boats from the wrecked liner, which carried 412 passengers and 231 members of the crew.

Very stormy weather, with strong northern winds, was reported from the scene. While it was pointed out that some of the missing may have been picked up and not reported safe, there was a growing fear here that they were lost.

Capt. Michel Schiano, master of the Orazio, who was making his last trip before retiring, was the last to leave the ship. He was picked up by the Italian liner Colombo.

Survivors said that the fire in the Orazio originated in an explosion in the engine room. Five of the ship's engineers were killed in the explosion, they said.

Official Italian sources at Genoa had announced that the fire started at 5:30 a. m. yesterday, 40 miles off the French naval base at Toulon, near Marseilles.

THE SAN FRANCISCO SKY-
LINE, by Elizabeth Gray Potter—
(Dodd, Mead & Co.)—isn't just another guide book, something that was thrown together in a few months, enlivened by the usual anecdotes and colored by the same convenient Spanish trappings. This book has the true "labor of love" quality. You know that the research Mrs. Potter did for her book was spread over a period of years as the book emanates a kind of mellowness and ripeness. If you are familiar with Mills College, you will know Mrs. Potter who was head librarian of the college for many years. Now she has retired and this book is the first fruit of her leisure. The story of San Francisco has many approaches: the historical, the racial, the artistic. Mrs. Potter touches more or less upon all of them. She begins with the historical story of the Portsmouth Plaza, the city's oldest public square. Today when we pass by the Plaza it seems to be in a state of "peaceful slumber" but less than a hundred years ago, Mrs. Potter tells us, it was a right lively place. With its few surrounding adobe houses it had been quiet enough until that eventful day in the summer of 1848 when Sam Brannan ran across it "holding in one hand a bottle of shining yellow specks and swinging his wide-brimmed hat in the other," shouting:—"Gold! Gold! Gold! from the American river."

It wasn't long before people from almost every country in the world were milling through that square. In the gambling houses that began to flourish all around it, fortunes were made and lost in a night. After the Plaza ceased to be the center of business activities, it became the Bohemian quarter: the home of artists and writers. Which takes us to the Stevenson monument now the tutelary genius of the square.

Mrs. Potter says that it was unveiled in 1897 and was the earliest monument to be erected to the memory of Robert Louis Stevenson. It remained entirely unscathed by the fire of 1906.

One of the few old pioneer buildings to withstand the earthquake and fire, the Montgomery building is near the Plaza. It was erected in 1853. In this building, Mrs. Potter writes, were housed the Mercantile Mechanics Library and the Sutro Library. Here was the famous Bank Exchange saloon where Duncan Nicol served his delectable pisco punch. The memory of Duncan Nicol and his pisco punch are not to be forgotten as in 1938, the E. Clampus Vitus placed a commemorative tablet in honor of both on the outside of the old building.

In the chapter on Chinatown we want especially to call your attention to what Mrs. Potter has to say about Cameron Alley. At one time it was called Wentworth alley and it had an unsavory reputation. Today the Chinese call it "the street of a thousand delights." If you want to provide your eastern friends with "atmosphere" by all means take them to Cameron alley. It is named for Miss Donaldina Cameron, one of San Francisco's most beloved and honored women whose courageous work with Chinese girls is known everywhere.

Bazaars in Cameron alley have quaint names as "the Pavilion of the Seven Maidens," or "Fah Peng," which means "vase." The Blue Willow Tea House where Chinese and American food is served, is said to be a copy of the original Blue Willow Tea House in Shanghai. In a building called simply "Art Studio" you will find one of the finest collections of Oriental art in San Francisco. You may have heard of the Chinese Shadow Play. The Red Gate Theatre in Cameron Alley under the direction of Miss Benton is the only Shadow Play theatre in America. Mrs. Potter gives such an alluring description of this unique form of entertainment that you will want to investigate it for yourself.

You will be sure to find your favorite haunt in San Francisco mentioned in "The San Francisco Skyline." You will find new light shed on Telegraph Hill and the foreign quarter, on the water front with its curious mixture of commerce and adventure, on the Mission Dolores with its historic cemetery in which are buried Indians, Spaniards and American gold seekers, on the old adobe building at the Presidio with all of its glamorous and romantic associations. There is a fascinating chapter on the San Francisco shops where you can pick up anything from Venetian glass to champagne. Gump's, Mrs. Potter says, "differ-from other stores in that nothing is purchased by buyers en masse... each article is individually selected by a connoisseur."

Read "The San Francisco Skyline." It will add to your knowledge and deepen your appreciation of familiar things.

"More Than Love"

by LEWIS ALLEN BROWNE

COPYRIGHT BY KING FEATURES SYNDICATE, INC.

Leland Forbes, author of many books on bird life, accidentally meets Jeanette Morse in Virginia. He learns that she is the J. Morse who has supplied all the photographs and drawings to illustrate his books. Forbes, heretofore always afraid of girls, is amazed to find himself in love. And, since Jeanette loves him, they become engaged and arrange for a special marriage. Then Forbes receives a letter from a girl named Lola, begging him to come to her, and he knows that he must obey.

CHAPTER II.

Leland Forbes sat for a full hour thinking over this situation. He finally decided that he could not tell Jeanette about Lola, or, at least, that it would not be fair to Lola to do so.

Fortunately Jeanette was going back to New York the next day. Leland wired to Gerald Adams, who was not only his lawyer but his closest chum. His message instructed Adams to telephone Lola that he was on his way to her.

He drove over to the hotel after dinner to see Jeanette and they took a ride down the beautiful old Boone trail.

"Business affairs have come up, dearest," he told her, "that make it necessary for me to go to New York, so I will go along with you tomorrow."

"How lovely, Leland!" He felt like groaning, because it wasn't lovely at all and the worst of it was he didn't know just what was ahead of him.

"At any rate, darling, we can select your ring while I am in New York."

"How wonderful it all is, Leland."

"More wonderful than words can describe, Jeanette."

"Think of a lifetime with you."

She hugged his arm. Leland hoped that he was dissembling, that she would not note his worry. He wondered if he ought to tell her. He had gone all over it in his mind before. Again he decided against it.

Lola was his sister—and his twin. They were all that was left of the family. One might think there was nothing to hide in the fact that his sister sent for him, but there was much back of it. The Forbes was a proud family and Lola had made a grave mistake. She had married Vance Harlow—she had believed herself in love with him. Vance had turned out to be worse than a mere villain; he was the lowest of the low. And Lola had an infant son.

Her love for her husband had fled, yet she was proud. She would rather die than have the world know what a fool she had been and especially did she want to hide the fact that her son had such a rotten father.

If Leland had told Jeanette all about this, Lola, he felt sure, would have been very much hurt. No, he couldn't tell her. He would run up to the old Connecticut homestead, see what trouble Lola was in, straighten things out and then go back and marry Jeanette.

They got into New York at noon. Leland took Jeanette to the Ritz for luncheon and then down to select the ring.

It was a beautiful ring. Jeanette was proud and delighted. "I am going to be tied up with business affairs, dearest, until tomorrow or next day. I will get in touch with you as soon as I am free," he promised as he left Jeanette at the uptown apartment where she lived with a married sister.

"I'll count the hours," she whispered as he kissed her just a split second before the door to the apartment was opened.

Jeanette introduced Leland to her sister, Mrs. Kellogg, and announced her engagement. Leland remained for a short half-hour and then rushed away to catch a train for Berryfield, where his sister lived in the old Forbes homestead. Forbes knew, at a glance, that his sister was in deeper trouble than ever. She explained that her husband was more brutal than ever in his demands that she secure the handling of her half of the Forbes fortune.

Leland, one of the executors for his sister's share, had always handled it for her.

"Vance insists that I make you turn it over to me," she explained. "I'll do that, Lola, to make things happier for you. He will get it from you and dissipate it, but I have enough for you and baby."

Leland was proud of his infant nephew, named for him. Lola shook her head despondently.

"You could handle it," Forbes suggested.

"No—he'd choke me into signing over to him."

"Choke you—literally?" Forbes became suspicious.

With a shamed face Lola pushed down the neck of her dress and showed bruises and then she was frightened at the look in her brother's eyes.

"Put one finger on Lola again and I'll kill you," Forbes said.

"Vance did that?" he demanded. "He—he had been drinking," she stammered.

"I'll take you and baby away."

"I can't—he may reform. It's awful for baby to grow up and learn that I had to leave his father."

"I'll fix him!"

"Leland—you frighten me—don't do anything—"

She choked and paled with fear.

"I won't murder him," he promised.

Vance Harlow came in just then in his sporty plus fours and his face red from too long a stay at the "nineteenth hole."

He greeted Forbes surlily. Forbes slipped the neck of Lola's dress down so that the bruises showed.

"What about this, Harlow?" he demanded.

Harlow turned to his wife.

"You squealer!" he cried.

Forbes sent Lola upstairs and went over to Vance, who struck at him. Forbes choked him and jammed him down in a chair. Then he slapped him across both sides of the face.

"Put one finger on Lola again and I'll kill you, you scum," Forbes said.

Vance, thoroughly yellow, promised faithfully to behave and go straight.

Forbes felt cheered at this and went back to New York after exchanging a promise from Lola to let him know if there was any more trouble with her worthless husband. He was so upset that he did not think it an appropriate time to tell Lola that he was about to marry beautiful Jeanette Morse. He would let her know after a few more days.

Leland and Jeanette dined together the next evening. They planned for their future. The place in Wytheville would be repainted and refurnished. Meanwhile they would make a trip through the West Indies and into parts of South America on their honeymoon, combining business with pleasure, since the business of writing and illustrating books on bird life was also a pleasure.

Everything would be "fifty-fifty" with them, they agreed, and then they laughed at each other.

"We are gushing—and we do not like gushers," Jeanette declared.

For several days they worked, Leland in his little New York apartment and Jeanette at her sister's home. Only a few days more were needed to finish this volume. Then they would have a quiet wedding and depart on their glorious honeymoon.

One night, out at dinner, John Maxin, the publisher, caught sight of Forbes and strode over to him. Then he recognized Jeanette.

"Hello, hello, hello!" he exclaimed, jovially. "I didn't know you people had ever met."

"Quite by accident, and we're just slightly acquainted," Forbes said, smiling knowingly at Jeanette.

"Well, well—you are a great team. You ought to know each other better and work together."

"We hope to," Forbes assured him and Jeanette flashed him an imploring glance as her cheeks crimsoned.

"I have to go back to my crowd—drop in at the office together," Maxin suggested.

"If we happen to meet each other," Forbes told him.

Maxin put on a playful expression and shook his finger at them.

"Take my advice, both of you. Get together—don't lose sight of each other!"

He walked back to his table.

"Sound advice, darling," Leland whispered.

"Won't he be surprised when he learns the truth?"

"If we had told him he would have made a great scene right here, Jeanette. I know him! Everybody about us would have known that we are engaged!"

"It was just as well, then."

Leland was in New York so little that he did not keep a car. He and Jeanette rode for an hour through the park, and Leland ordered the driver not to get a ticket for speeding. He understood.

They made their plans for the quiet little marriage and Leland made notes of their itinerary.

"After that trip think how wonderful the quietude of the little Virginia place will be, dearest!"

"Heaven—or Eden at least," she agreed.

When Forbes got to his apartment that night he found a long letter from Lola. His sister was still miserably unhappy.

Part of the letter was: "Vance's relatives have pounced down on me and make me things more miserable than ever. He hasn't used force, but has been more abusive than ever. If it wasn't for Lily, my maid, I would be afraid, at times. She understands everything and I trust her never to talk outside. Vance's relatives have been living on the money he wheedled out of me and gave them. Now they are greedy and want him to get all of my property. I am afraid of them. Once when Vance was choking me I threatened to kill him. He has told them about it and they are throwing it up at me. What do you advise?"

This came as a most unhappy incident in the midst of all of Leland's happiness. He sat late thinking it over. At least he decided that within a few days he would run down and see Lola and then tell her about his coming marriage. It seemed to him that he might take her down to his Virginia home to live, away from Vance, while he was on his honeymoon.

Leland was fed up on it all. Once back from his honeymoon he would send Lola to Paris for a divorce. He wasn't going to permit her to be beaten and abused and shamed, even if her pride did dry out against the least publicity.

His little nephew would be better off reared away from such a man as his father.

Leland wanted to tell Jeanette all about it the next day, but he had given his word to Lola not to talk and he would have to see her first. When she understood that he was to marry Jeanette she would see that it would have to be explained to her.

Jeanette was in Maxin's office the next day when Leland came in with the last of his copy.

"I want to show you some marvelous photographs Miss Morse made," the old man said and he was so puzzled over their laughter that they explained all about it—all about being together when the photographs were taken, and all about their marriage plans, greatly to the delight of the old man who, although a wealthy bachelor, believed thoroughly in matrimony—for others.

Leland went around to see his friend and lawyer, Gerald Adams, and explained all about his plans and discussed Lola's sad affairs. For Adams had to know about this, since he handled the family finances for both Leland and Lola.

Adams said that Leland's plan about Lola was the best thing to do. He heartily congratulated Leland on his coming marriage and then Leland went home very happy.

The next day he was going to buy a little circlet of diamonds—Jeanette's wedding ring.

He was busy in his apartment, packing certain papers and books and other things to be used in his bird life study while on his southern honeymoon.

Suddenly the buzzer at his apartment door sounded so long and persistently that he was startled. He went down through the foyer ready to scold whoever kept their finger on the button like that.

When he opened the door Lola, her baby in her arms, her face as white as death, half stumbled in.

"Oh, Leland!" she cried.

"What is it, dear? Did he strike you again? If he did I'll strike you again! If he did I'll strike you again!"

"Oh, Lee—or God, Lee—I've killed him!"

She ran to the bedroom and put down the baby. Leland Forbes knew well enough that his sister was not hysterical but quite sane despite her agony of mind.

She told him about it—self-defense when he started to attack her.

"I threatened to kill him and he told his relatives. There were no witnesses. I can't have my son know that I killed his father, Lee. You must take me away, hide me! His relatives will see that I get the chair or life—save me, Lee!"

"Yes, Lola," Leland promised. He needed no more words to be convinced that she was right about the necessity of hiding where the long arm of the law could never reach her.

He hastily wrote some letters. One of them was to Jeanette, as follows:

"Dearest: I have to run away, for how long I cannot say, for what reason I cannot explain. Try and have faith in me and destroy this note."

"LELAND."

In an unpretentious house in Detroit, Mich., sits a man whose name is a byword for millions of motorists. They never knew him, or have forgotten him, but he still remembers. Louis Chevrolet has only memories to live with now.

It was in 1911 that the native of La Chaux de Fonds, Switzerland, penciled a signature later carried throughout the world on the automobile he designed. He had come from Paris to the United States, set a new world's speed record of 111 miles an hour for automobile drivers at Sheephead Bay, N. Y., and later had hopes of success with another car, with cylinder heads for model T Fords, and with airplane engines.

The first Chevrolet included the first counter-balanced crankshaft, the first gear shift lever in the mid-

SELF-RELIANCE CHILD'S RIGHT!

By Garry Cleveland Myers, Ph.D.

WHILE SOME mothers don't do enough for their children, others do far too much for them, robbing them of self-reliance. It is very easy for any of us to cause our children to be over-dependent on us; and after we have so injured them we may grow vexed at the very traits for which we have been responsible. The following extreme case is an example.

"Dear Dr. Myers—I am hoping there is something I can do indirectly to help an 18-year-old boy, my brother's son, find his place in life before there is a tragedy.

"The boy's mother is one of those women with whom cleaning is a phobia. R. G. always was the best dressed boy at school. When he got his suit soiled, he would wait at his father's office until he could go home with him rather than face the situation alone.

Dressed, Bathed Him

"He has been so completely supervised that he never even dressed himself until recently, and, believe it or not, a year ago she still bathed him (he might spatter a drop of water if he had to do it). She has successfully destroyed every bit of initiative or self-confidence the boy should have. In fact, he has never had these characteristics; they were choked from the start.

"Naturally, he never developed any study or work habits. Now his parents constantly criticize him for not displaying any of these qualities they have destroyed. He has been failing consistently in his studies, although his mind is O.K.

"Two weeks ago his cousin, who has been held up as an example to R. G. all these years, graduated from high school. R. G. wouldn't attend the graduating exercises.

Doesn't Understand

"His father fails to understand. He just harps on his faults and what a problem he is. Recently he said: 'I'm going to make R. G. finish his high school if it takes 12 years,' then added, 'Can you feature an 18-year-old boy standing around chewing his nails and wishing he were dead?'

"Poor boy! I could weep! Any little gutter snipe or street arab has a better chance to cope with life than this 150-pound, six-foot boy. Yet, he has many possibilities, one of which is a talent for drawing which has never been stressed. He played the snare drum in the school band when not barred from this little pleasure because of low grades in his other studies.

"I hope that we may be able to do enough for R. G. to make him wish for something besides death."

And I hope the suggestions I wrote her on how she might change the attitude of R. G. parents toward him will be helpful. Also I hope the suggestions will be of serious errors of the parents of R. G.

EFFORT IS MADE TO KEEP KNOWN CRIMINALS FROM GAINING PLACE ON ROLLS OF STATE CIVIL SERVICE

SACRAMENTO.—Federal G-Men and the State Personnel Board combine their resources to prevent the entrance of known criminals into the California State civil service system.

"Through the cooperation of the Federal Bureau of Identification," State Personnel Board, "we are now able to check the previous record of all persons who apply for civil service examinations."

It is the state personnel agency's policy to fingerprint job candidates and to submit the fingerprints to the F. B. I. office in Washington.

This system protects the employee who has had a minor law violation from later embarrassing investigation and attendant notoriety as well as protecting the state service from criminals. Through this arrangement with the Federal government, the personnel board was notified of 19 persons who had applied for civil service examinations in the past month who had police records.

"When these individuals have been guilty of minor offenses and have met the conditions of their sentence it has usually been our policy to consider the matter as closed, but we take a different attitude where the offense has been extremely serious or has been of such a nature that the individual might be tempted to repeat it if employed by the state," said the board's executive officer.

"We do not feel that a single mistake need prohibit an individual from employment if he has satisfied the penalty of the law. We are grateful to the Bureau of Identification for lending their facilities to us," added Mr. Kroeger.

Fingerprinting is required for most civil service examinations at the present time.

Henry Morey's Car Stolen, Found Out Of Gas

Someone stole Henry Morey's car from Cana Street Sunday evening, where it was parked in front of the home of Mr. and Mrs. Frank Morey. Henry Morey reported the theft to city police as soon as it was discovered and the police took Henry and his family to their home and gave a description of the car to the state Highway Patrol for state-wide broadcasting.

Following a hunch, Mr. Morey decided to return to the down-town section on the chance that he might see the car. Knowing that he had little gasoline in the machine, he checked with down-town service stations and was unable to learn that any of them had, during the night, serviced a car such as described.

He was on the point of abandoning the search when friends returning from Sacramento reported having seen a car answering the description on the highway east of Shingle near Supervisor Heuser's place and Mr. Morey investigated and found that it was his car, out of gas but otherwise unhurt.

Ione was ahead, 4 to 2, in the B team game, at the end of the first round but when the teams stopped to rest, it was 12 to 8 for the Cougars. Each quint added four in the third round and two in windup. Sinclair led the Cougars tossers with seven. Holt got six.

In the final game of the night, the Cougars were none to pleased with the 8 to 5 margin at the end of the first quarter and were better satisfied when the half-time count was 23 to 11. Ione put on a spurt in the third period and took seven points but the Cougars topped them by taking nine and repeated in the closing period, while Ione got but five. Cliff Swesey topped the Cougar scorers with fifteen and Killian got thirteen while Boggs scored ten. Ker was high for Ione with eleven.

The program for the meeting, arranged under the chairmanship of Eben K. Smart, a member of the school board, had as a principal speaker Henry S. Lyon, of Placerville, Grand First Vice-President of the Native Sons.

The exercises opened with an invocation followed by a selection by the school band and a talk by Henry R. Speiss, Grass Valley School Superintendent. On behalf of Quartz Parlor, of Native Sons, the school was presented with an American Flag and the Bear Flag which were accepted on behalf of the school by Gilbert Tenmis, principal.

Mr. Lyon spoke following a vocal solo and his remarks were followed by Grand President Jesse H. Miller and the officers of the Grand Parlor set in place a bronze plaque at the northeast entrance to the building. The exercises closed with the band playing the national anthem and the new school unit was thrown open for public inspection.
